Job Market Demand

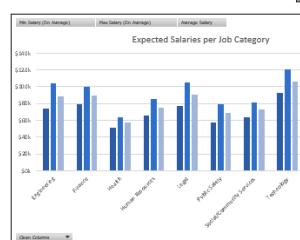

Within New York City agencies there is an extremely high job demand. This demand is seemingly controlled by a small number of agencies -- most notably the Department of Correction, Department of Health/Mental Hygiene, and the NYC Housing Authority. The listed companies control a large portion of total job openings. Within these high demand agencies the hiring demand is further concentrated into a small number of business titles, indicating targeted workforce needs rather than evenly distributed hiring.

Career Level Salaries

There is a large variation in the compensation by job category. The highest paid roles are the Technology, Legal, and Engineering roles, and the lower paid roles are Public Safety, Social/Community Service, and Health roles. The spread between the minimum compensation and maximum are in the Technology and Legal roles, suggesting a greater variability in experience and specialization within those roles.

Employment Type and Stability

Employment stability is heavily reliant on job category. Legal, Engineering, Social/Community Service, Technology, Finance, and Public Safety roles are overwhelmingly full-time roles, indicating stable, longer-term employment structure. In contrast, Health roles are much more dependent on part-time roles, suggesting greater workforce flexibility.
